In this generative poetry workshop, students will engage with weekly reading and writing exercises that address elements of craft, including such topics as creating strong poem endings and beginnings; optimizing the relationship between line and sentence; expanding their sources of language and image; engaging in generative revision; and exploring elements of mystery or surprise in their own work. Weekly peer workshops will provide spaces for further conversation about craft, as well as support in revising poems for final course portfolios. Guest poets, special audio features, and weekly optional “wildcard” writing assignments will allow students to build a toolbox of resources to carry forward beyond the course.

MCW 413-0 Fiction Workshop (1 Unit)
Using student work and published short stories, the class examines the craft of fiction writing. Students analyze stories by examining structure, point of view, style and other elements of craft and technique to answer the question, “What is this piece about?” With an emphasis on developing voice, students write and revise two short stories for instructor and peer review. (See syllabus for the focus of each particular workshop.)

MCW 413-DL Fiction Writing Workshop (1 Unit)
Using student work and published short stories, the class examines the craft of fiction writing. Students analyze stories by examining structure, point of view, style and other elements of craft and technique to answer the question, “What is this piece about?” With an emphasis on developing voice, students write and revise two short stories for instructor and peer review. (See syllabus for the focus of each particular workshop.)

MCW 417-0 Popular Fiction Workshop (1 Unit)
Writing workshop centered on popular fiction. Type of popular fiction will vary. May be repeated for credit with different topic.

MCW 417-DL Popular Fiction Writing Workshop (1 Unit)
This workshop course will investigate popular fiction genres and examine the tools of fiction—characterization, point of view, world-building, and more—that create an affecting experience for readers and a compelling story ready for the literary marketplace. Students will read and discuss a variety of popular fiction texts and be expected to explore popular fiction elements in their own writing, honing their craft skills through weekly workshops of their work and work drafted by their peers. Students will self-direct and reflect on a revision process toward a final portfolio project while also developing an understanding of and enthusiasm for the ongoing commitment to developing as a writer and becoming a literary citizen.

MCW 461-0 Creative Non-Fiction Workshop (1 Unit)
Creative nonfiction workshops may focus on essays, memoirs, cultural criticism, literary journalism, nature or travel writing or related forms. Discussions center on student work along with analysis of a wide variety of selected readings. The class examines modes of creative nonfiction, authorial distance, structure, aspects of style and other elements of craft. Students submit two works for review and revision.

MCW 461-DL Nonfiction Writing Workshop (1 Unit)
In this workshop, students will explore the elements of great nonfiction, through reading, exercises and production of publication-worthy story. We will start by reading a selection of writings across a variety of nonfiction genres, including memoir, biography, history, and literary journalism. We will study why these stories are so successful, and several professional writers will visit our class to tell us how they do it. In class, we will work through a variety of exercises designed to hone students’ writing skills and enhance their story telling abilities. Since stories start with ideas, we’ll discuss how to find ideas and develop them. Students will receive detailed feedback from the professor on their writing and go over their manuscripts with the professor on a one-to-one basis.
MCW 479-0 Poetry for Prose Writers (1 Unit)
This class examines how the art of poetry can improve the writing of fiction and creative nonfiction. By examining what strategies are shared across genres and what distinguishes one genre from another, students explore how the elements of both genres work in isolation and in concert with one another. This course begins with an introduction to the major elements of poetry and moves across genres to examine similar modes and impulses in literary prose.

MCW 479-DL Poetry for Prose Writers (1 Unit)
Poetry for Prose Writers examines how the art of poetry can enrich the writing of fiction and creative nonfiction. By examining the literary strategies shared across genres and the elements distinguishing one genre from another, students will explore how both genres work in isolation and in concert with one another. This course includes an introduction to traditional and more modern forms of poetry and moves across genres to examine similar modes and impulses in literary prose.

MCW 480-0 Prose for Poets (1 Unit)
The class examines how prose strategies, resources, and devices can apply to poetry. Students explore the elements and models of prose structure and prose style, including syntax and the sentence; detail and image; diction; the rhetoric of feeling; narration from the first-person point of view and the third. Readings include fiction and nonfiction. This course fulfills the cross-genre requirement for poetry students and may be taken as an elective by fiction and nonfiction students.

MCW 490-0 Special Topics in Creative Writing (1 Unit)
Topics vary. May be repeated for credit with different topic.

MCW 490-DL Special Topics (1 Unit)
Topics vary. May be repeated for credit with different topic.

MCW 495-0 Interdisciplinary Writing Studio (1 Unit)
In this combined workshop, students will write in their home genre, but all will read, discuss and analyze a variety of classic, experimental and short-short stories and pieces of creative nonfiction. Students will brainstorm and write in class, and will develop/revise/re-see their own projects outside of class. Students will also be required to include some research in one of their pieces and to turn in two drafts to be work shopped.

MCW 499-0 Independent Study (1 Unit)
Independent Study.

MCW 500-0 Seminar on Teaching Creative Writing (1 Unit)
This seminar incorporates a theory-to-practice approach to teaching creative writing. Students examine different philosophies and modes of teaching - exercises, critical papers, workshop creative work, and reading for writing. Topics include the workshop, how to teach revision, critical analysis and journaling, issues of craft, the job market, and how to apply for a teaching job. Students in this class develop ideas and material that they teach in community workshops and other educational events.

MCW 570-DL Seminar on Journal Publishing (1 Unit)
This class looks at the evolution of large and small presses, the effects of Amazon, and the internet and digital publishing on conventional book industry structures, the roles of review publications and reviewers, among other related topics.

MCW 575-DL The Publishing Industry - Book Publishers and Literary Journals (1 Unit)
This class looks at the evolution of large and small presses, the effects of Amazon, and the internet and digital publishing on conventional book industry structures, the roles of review publications and reviewers, among other related topics.

MCW 576-0 Seminar in Publishing: The Industry (1 Unit)