

ART HISTORY

Degree Types: PhD

The Department of Art History (<https://arthistory.northwestern.edu/>) offers a full-time doctoral program that is designed to prepare our graduates for professional lives as art historians and theorists of visual and spatial cultures. Course offerings are designed for those with grounding in the field and its related disciplines. The PhD curriculum moves from a general introduction to the methods and philosophies of the discipline to a more specific exploration of the student's chosen field. Graduates are trained for careers in teaching and many alumni have had considerable success in the museum field, while students from other fields often take our classes to deepen their own disciplinary engagements with visual and spatial culture.

The faculty is renowned for its forward-looking, often transregional scholarship, with particular strengths in Black Visual Culture in the United States and African Diaspora; Modern and Contemporary art and architecture across the globe; and European art and architecture from the early modern period through the 19th-century. Offerings from other fields of study are also readily available.

The department's comparative and transdisciplinary orientation offers ample opportunity for innovative research, which is amplified by programs and clusters across the Weinberg College of Arts and Sciences and within The Graduate School (TGS). Students in this program are encouraged to participate in TGS's Interdisciplinary Cluster Initiative program (<https://www.tgs.northwestern.edu/admission/academic-programs/clusters-and-certificates/>).

Global Perspectives

Developing depth and breadth in the history of art objects and practices across geographic locations and time, alert to the ways in which artworks and other artifacts are tied to near and distant cultures and locations by relations of exchange, encounter, coalition, competition, domination, performance, religion, ritual or resistance. Our department's comparative and cross-disciplinary orientation trains our students for scholarly and museum positions increasingly focused on more global perspectives in the discipline. These approaches place our program at the forefront of current debates within art history.

Criteria for Evaluation: Evaluation of seminar papers in a range of courses including the summer seminar abroad, development of exam lists and qualifying exams, dissertation prospectus and a successful dissertation based on extensive research in pertinent archives and in accordance with disciplinary standards of excellence.

Diverse Methodological Expertise

Developing depth and breadth of methodological expertise. Northwestern's art history program has long been a leader in methodological debates within the discipline. Our students learn to identify and deploy a diverse range of methods, including critical race theory, postcolonial approaches, studies of empire, ecocriticism, visual culture methodology, sound study, ethnography, literary and discursive analysis, social history, Marxism, and other related fields of critical theory and analysis.

Criteria for Evaluation: Evaluation of the first year AH 401: Proseminar, seminar papers in a range of courses, summer seminar abroad, development of and passing of the "concentration" exam list for the qualifying exams.

Object-Based Study

Developing expertise in object-based study. Our program places particular emphasis on this aspect of art history, because it is our belief that the careful scrutiny of forms, objects, and practices is not only integral to the historical analysis of particular cultural imaginaries, but also offers vital lessons for students about the reigning logics of visual production in the present and means of critiquing them.

Criteria for Evaluation: Participation in graduate courses that frequently include museum and exhibition components, including AH 401: Proseminar, AH 403: COSI Objects and Materials, and AH 405: Summer Seminar Abroad, evaluation of seminar papers in these and other courses, the prospectus, and dissertation.

Archive and Object-Based Research

Designing, carrying out, and revising original archive and object-based research; conveying new interpretations resulting from research with clarity both orally and in writing; and articulating the broader impacts of research to a wider community of scholars.

Criteria for Evaluation: Evaluation of seminar papers, assessment of extensive research in pertinent archives/locations in the dissertation.
